

BUILD YOUR WEALTH WITH THE FORBES INVESTMENT GUIDE

New York, NY (May 18, 2005)—In its spring Investment Guide (p. 91), Forbes shows how to store up gold for the golden years without having to rely on a high-paid financial adviser. The comprehensive guide includes sections on:

- Do-It-Yourself Retirement (p. 92), using low-cost Web tools to help gauge your prospects and calibrate tradeoffs.
- Bridging any gaps in portfolios using home equity and continuing to work (p. 100).
- Building wealth in individual corners of the investment world such as:
 - Stocks in gene-sourced medical testing (p. 106).
 - The new long/short mutual funds (p. 126).
 - Speculating on high-end golf resort real estate (p. 138).
 - Kicking mad money into a minor-league football team (p. 158).
- Surviving bankruptcy under the harsh new law (p. 146).

For the full story and more, visit www.forbes.com

RELATED ARTICLES:

RETIRE? NOT SO FAST (p. 100)—The boomers won't be beggars in retirement. Financial reality and the realization that they might not really enjoy 30 years of leisure are leading many Americans to rethink when—and how fully—to stop working.

HEDGING FOR CHEAPSKATES (p. 126)—You can use a mutual fund to copy one of the hedge crowd's favorite maneuvers: the long/short strategy.

OTHER STORIES:

XBOX 180 (p. 62)—Humiliated in its early efforts to crack the videogame market, Microsoft has a bold new strategy: Design a machine for people who don't play videogames and beat Sony to the market.

FUTURE TELLER (p. 71)—Doctors tell us what's wrong with our bodies today. Computer scientist Astro Teller says his software will predict what's going to go wrong tomorrow.

SPORE WARS (p. 163)—The short-lived anthrax attacks that started a week after Sept. 11 are still shrouded in mystery. The next attack could be far more horrific. Odorless and invisible, one big cloud of anthrax could kill as many people as a hydrogen bomb.

Contact: Meghan Womack at (212) 367-4157 or mwomack@forbes.com